

MTPredictor to launch new trading software

MTPredictor is preparing for the launch of its new Real-time 4.0 program, for short-term and day-traders. This is pure real-time software, integrated initially with eSignal datafeeds. It features the company's unique Trade Scanner which identifies complete trade set-ups the instant they unfold, across multiple markets and timeframes simultaneously. It also instantly displays all relevant trade and risk/reward analysis on the chart for visual confirmation of the R/R outlook and exit strategy. The company's Isolation Approach™ to Elliott Wave underpins the trade selection and risk/reward routines.

Tony Beckwith of MTPredictor told The Technical Analyst, "RT 4.0 answers traders' key questions of how to find new trades, how to decide which are worth the risk and how much to risk, then how to manage selected trades consistently".

The company also announced a planned series of online demonstrations to be featured on its website showing the software in action. Three online presentations are already available, covering key features of End-of-Day 4.0 with audio advice from the developer Steve Griffiths. This forms an extra educational tool for visitors to the site.

RT 4.0 has a provisional launch date towards late-April and will go on sale at $1,995.00, with details on the website.
